

NBA has already produced results! Two young women, who attended as eighth graders, are now graduating and going on to become computer scientists. Ashley Fisher (Willamette University) and Sabrina Houser (Seattle Pacific University) have taken computer science and technology courses for four years at North Salem High and along with 14 other North computer science students will be striving to attain computer science or engineering degrees. Besides taking Advanced Placement CS they took classes in CAD, robotics, and networking. They were also interns managing help desk tasks for both North High and Salem-Keizer School District. This is just the tip of the iceberg, the other 90% of the growth in diversity will occur in the next several years
